If you planted your corn in a killed sod better plan to check the fields regularly for army worm damage. Daily checking is recommended. These insects begin feeding in late May and continue into June.

Although we've never had a major out break in Appomattox County there's always a first time.

Failure to check may cause the corn to be replanted.

Couldn't help but admire the beautiful hybric rhododendrons at the T. Dewitt Evans home last week. These are beautiful plants that should be used more extensively.

When you price a pesticide and it sounds a bit high remember from every 10,000 compounds tested only one new pesticide emerges. The average time from discovery to market is now 8 to 10 years at a cost of more than $10 million.

Two Kentucky researchers at the Louisville School of Medicine ran lab tests on $13.47 worth of coins of all denominations and $150 worth of small bills which they borrowed from various individuals. Findings? -- 13% of the coins and 45% of the bills were contaminated with bacteria which could cause disease.

I'm glad we have the custom of paying for a meal after eating rather than before.

Granular herbicides are formulated by incorporating herbicides on inert carriers as clay, corn cob, vermiculite, silica sand or peat. Attopulgite clay is the most common one.

Particle size is controlled by screening. Sizes range from 1/15 to 1/40 inch depending on the use. The coarser one s are better adapted for application by rotary distributors, being heavier and less affected by air movement. They are also preferred for aquatic use because they sink rapidly and do not float out of treated areas.

A number of farmers and home owners have asked where they could get a soil sampling tube. I understand that Southern States are making them available through their member agencies. There are also other sources through which these can be bought.

The lowly dung beetle can help free cattle from parasitic worms by burying manure pads containing parasitic eggs. The parasites are thus prevented from hatching and crawling onto the surrounding grass where they would be eaten by grazing cattle.

This is another example of biological control of insects.

Depending upon who you are the buttercup is a beautiful wild flower or just another weed in the pasture. We've never had a larger display than this spring. This winter annual can be controlled by using one pound of 2,4-D per acre in late October to early November. Pick a day when the temperature is 60% or better.

Peter Francisco was a legendary hero of the American Revolution, noted for his height and physical strength and prowess.

Fawn Killed By Angry Bull

Grover P. Beasley, Jr. (above) went to his farm last Thursday and discovered a 1700 pound bull trampling this young albino fawn. He guesses that the deer was about a week old. He ran to the field and beat off the angry bull with sticks but was too late to save the young animal. Albino deer are relatively rare, although reports of albino are heard from time to time in Appomattox county. The Beasley farm is located in the Vera area of Cloverhill district. "Jr." Beasley expressed deep regret that the deer was killed and stated he would have enjoyed knowing that a rare animal like this was growing and prospering in the county.

Poor Eyesight No Barrier To Eye Donation

RICHMOND, VA.-- It is a common misconception that the eye tissue from a donor who had poor vision cannot be useful in restoring the sight of a blind individual through a corneal transplant operation, according to an announcement by R. Kenneth Hudgins, Executive Director of the Old Dominion Eye Bank.

Actually, said Hudgins, only an insignificantly small percentage of individuals having poor eyesight have suffered any damage to the corneas of the eye which is the only portion used in such transplant operations.

Many formerly blind individuals, said Hudgins, are now able to see much better than the donors who provided the eye tissue, on death, through a pledge to the eye bank. In most cases of poor vision, Hudgins said, the sight defect is caused by other areas of the eye than the cornea.

Hudgins urged all Virginians, regardless of whether they wear glasses for vision correction, to pledge their eye tissue, on death to the Old Dominion Eye Bank by signing an eye donor card available from any member of a Lions Club or from the Old Dominion Eye Bank, 408 North 12th Street, Richmond, Va.
